

PUHE-513: Public Health Planning & Evaluation (Elective)

Health programs usually are implemented to achieve specific outcomes by performing some type of intervention or service. This graduate-level course will provide students with the basic language, knowledge, skills, and sensibilities to plan and conduct evaluations of public health programs even though the concepts and methods are equally relevant to other sectors. The evaluation cycle, including conceptualization and design, implementation, and dissemination of results/use of findings, will be discussed.
